

February 2026

February always feels a little quiet on the calendar, and that is OK. This is the part of the year where it can look like nothing is happening, when in reality a lot of groundwork is being laid for the season ahead.

The biggest personal update for me this month is the launch of The Governor's Garage podcast. This is a personal project I started over the winter, outside of any single club, to share stories, experiences, and conversations from across the Corvette and motorsports community. It went from an idea to a real show pretty quickly, and the response so far has been incredibly encouraging. Subscribers are coming in, views are climbing, and the feedback has been genuinely motivating.

We have released two episodes so far. The first episode was an introduction to the podcast itself, the why behind it, and the kind of conversations I want to have going forward. It was not an NCCC-focused episode, but rather a foundation piece to set the tone. The second episode moved closer to competition leadership and event management topics, offering insight into how organized motorsports works and why volunteers and leadership roles matter as much as they do. If you have had a chance to listen, thank you. If not, it will be there when you are ready. This is a long-term project, built to be useful, educational, and honest.

On the NCCC front, February is officially the offseason, but that does not mean things are quiet. The new Rulebook has been published, events are beginning to populate the calendar, and registration for the National Convention opens on February 1st. Behind the scenes, governors, regions, and national leadership are reviewing flyers, assigning sanctions, answering questions, and preparing for the year ahead. It may not be flashy work, but it is essential.

As a club, this is a great time to look forward. Watch the calendar as it fills in. Think about which events you want to attend, support, or work. If you are newer to NCCC, this is the perfect time to ask questions. If you have been around for a while, it is a good time to reach out and help others get ready. Strong seasons are built during the quiet months.

Spring will be here before we know it. Until then, enjoy the slower pace, keep an eye on what is coming, and know that a lot of effort is happening behind the scenes to make sure the season runs smoothly.
